HISTORICAL CHINA PUT ON EXHIBITION

Old Blue Plates Commemorate Many Events of Great Moment.

A varied and interesting art collection was placed on public view yesterday by the American Art Association, consisting of historical blue china and Oriental art objects and textiles. The pieces come chiefly from the collections of Miss Florence I. Chauncey of Brooklyn and the late Alfred D. Bernard of Baltimore The old blue plates record many his toric events of first importance and the buildings that were considered wonderful by our forefathers, the enterprises that were considered of great public moment, and the personages that were highest in esteem all occur and reoccur with great frequency in these designs. There is, of course, a great deal of Lafayette, who is shown not only when he landed at Castle Garden applauded by 200,000 New Yorkers, but also at all of his various ping places.

The collection includes a great many specimens that have been reproduced to illustrate R. T. H. Halsey's work, "Early New York," and in spite of their great age have guarded their deep blue glazes intact. Of these are the famous "Balti-more and Ohio" plates, the "Ruins of the Merchants' Exchange, New York," pin's Mills on the Brandywine Creek," the "City Hotel" and the "City Hall" of New York, the "Franklin Library" of New York, the "Franklin Library" of Philadelphia, the "Charleston Exchange," the ship "Cadmus" that brought Lafay-ette to America and the "Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Hartford." There are also statuettes in Stafford-shire ware of Uncle Tom, Little Eva and

The new show begins early and ends late, and the time between is crowded with rapidly moving scenes, some of which are strikingly well staged, among them the harem scene from "The Wanderer," the Yale Bowl and the patriotic finale "Liberty," in which all the resources and ingenuity of the producers is effectively applied. Other scenes include "The Animated Pierrots," and "The Fans of the Nations," both of which make pretty stage pictures: the football game, which is presented with novel effect, and the fountain room, which is a surprise.

We have in addition to this recognized the great need for food production. We realise that under conditions existing to-day the world faces a possibility of a food famine and we are putting forth every effort within our power to increase the agricultural production this year. But the employment in our munition industrial ranks to fill our forces for oversea service.
